On the very day that this "Deal" was released to the public Microsoft blocked all none Microsoft browser from entering the MSN.com web site saying that they where not compliant and that a upgrade to Internet Explorer was necessary to view the web pages. Well a check of compliance to the standard revealed that fully more than 80% of MSN.com pages where not compliant and that browsers that spoofed the servers into thinking that they where Internet Explorer could surf the MSN.com web site without any problems. This happened on the very same day this deal was announced. Are we learning anything here?

This deal is just plain bad for consumers. Microsoft has learn nothing and they continue to abuse there monopoly ever chance they get. Enough is enough. Enforce the law ! They broke it and continue to break it, now why are not being held accountable?

Putting Internet Explorer on Linux is not a option.

Sincerely

G Conner
